We can talk about this later. I don't have time to deal w/ this at work nor do I want to argue with you over email.

-----I do not have a problem communicating my TRUE feelings and telling you how I feel. I have problems when I DO tell you how I feel and you don't address those feelings or my thoughts/concerns. I put down multiple concerns in my first email that I would like to address with you, but you did not respond too (I realize you don't have time at work to address everything). I am not opposed to going to a counselor, but I am standing by what we agreed upon and that is for YOU to go figure out the sexual issues of your past and for you to discuss your parents divorce and relationship issues first. I don't think you will ever take the initiative any other way.
After that, if we still need to see a counselor for you and I, then fine.----- -----craving attention is one thing, but going so far as to make things up to get it is TOO much. The most "liked" people that I've ever been around are the most genuine, and when you thrive on "drama" so much that you lie to create that drama, that is not being genuine and folks see right through it, whether you realize it or not. One day, it all comes out. A prime example of this "drama" is what you just addressed below. The "drama" had me putting "no thought" into our anniversary, not giving you a card and not getting you anything. In reality, I HANDWROTE you a card, dropped it in the mail on 10/7 as it is postmarked and got you more $25 worth of Starbucks cards. Have you gone back to your mom and told her all that yet??? All I've heard about is how I don't care b/c I didn't even get a card or anything for you...heck, I actually did more than you...you wrote "love, michelle" and i actually had a nice hand written note. In reality, does that bother me? NO, but I have to point that out as a defensive mechanism since you came on so strong to me in front of your mom. Moral of the story--don't get so emotional over "spilled milk" and make sure your mom and WHOEVER else gets a picture of the GOOD as well as the bad.----- i don't get this...when she MOVES here, she shouldn't BE here at all. THAT is what HER house is for. If she wants to come have dinner or visit for a few hours...fine, but she is not going to LIVE here.

no. i do not want your mom here a week before christmas and i don't want her here through new years eve. if she wants to come AT Christmas and stay for two or three nights, then fine. I am not spending my entire holiday season with my mother in law at my house. i'm not wavering on this and i don't think i'm being extreme. if you're mom lived in California and we saw her once a year, then sure, come stay for a week, but i see her VERY VERY VERY often and i don't think she is being neglected in regards to

"granddaughter time". if your mom, is here for anything over a few days around Christmas, then i will simply choose to spend my Christmas elsewhere. enough is enough and i've told you this until i'm blue in the face. you can make me be the villain again on this, or you can make something up...three nights is PLENTY of time considering how much we've already seen her in october, how much we WILL see her in novemeber and again in december. i'm not budging on this.

We talked some about talking with your mom is GREAT, making stuff up, being dramatic and spouting off when you're emotional is nothing but bad. i can't believe you haven't already learned your lesson about this, but you see the point that i'm at with your mother now. do you really think it's worth straining that relationship further for your own drama?

i have addressed these issues and we've agreed upon a solution, but YOU are to talk to someone about YOUR issues first. i will then GLADLY move forward from there.

Btw -

i will talk to steph to see her availability. i am going to go over to broncie's one night to party with the "young school" guys since they will all be in town this weekend, so i'm not sure if that will be friday or saturday, but it shouldn't have any conflict with dinner plans either way.

and i do love you too and want it to work!
