

HURRICANE MATTHEW

RELIEF & RECOVERY

---

Brad and Brandi Davis of Raleigh organized their own recovery effort after Hurricane Matthew left family members without basic necessities such as food, water, and clothing. What started as a modest effort turned into a community volunteering opportunity that continues to provide aid and relief to those still in need in the Robeson County area. The Davis' began the #FillUpAUHaul campaign that gathered items and monetary donations from people across the triad and beyond to help those affected by Hurricane Matthew in Robeson County, including people who are a part of the Lumbee tribe.

FEMA STATE SUPPORT

---

FEMA has broad categories of relief provided to states during disasters such as Hurricane Matthew. Assistance can be granted to individuals or communities.

The Individuals and Household Program offers money to those in disaster areas, which must be declared by the President. The Housing Assistance Division provides assistance for any housing needs. Other Needs Assistance provides for other broad needs, including transportation, medical needs, and furnishings.

Public Assistance grants are available to communities in areas which show need to recover and respond quickly after an emergency or disaster. Emergency Work is money distributed in order to reduce or eliminate threats to life, protect public health and safety, and protect improved poverty that is threatened due to disasters. This data was updated as of November 14, 2016.
